US. While almost every one of them has a stable state in which it remains, some states do not. A system is unstable if, starting from an initial state, it eventually moves to a different state. For the system to be stable, it must be that, starting from any initial state, it eventually moves to a stable state. For example, if a system starts in state 1, it will eventually move to state 2, and if it starts in state 2, it will eventually move to state 3, and so on, it is unstable. If, on the other hand, it starts in state 1, it will eventually move to state 2, and if it starts in state 2, it will eventually move to state 2, and so on, it is stable.

Detailed description of Figure 1: The graph plots 'Rate' on the vertical axis against 'Concentration' on the horizontal axis. The vertical axis has major tick marks at 0, 0.5, and 1.0. The horizontal axis has major tick marks at 0, 0.5, and 1.0. A smooth curve starts at the point (0, 1.0) and decreases monotonically as concentration increases. The curve is concave up, indicating a non-linear relationship. The equation $\frac{1}{1 + K[I]}$ is written near the curve.
